

SyberWorks Media Center Presents a New Article – “Four Basic Flash Learning Activities For e-Learning Development” (Part 1)

Waltham, Massachusetts – October 23, 2006

SyberWorks, Inc., a leader in custom e-Learning Solutions and the Learning Management System (LMS) industry, today announces a new article available in the SyberWorks Online Media Center: “Four Basic Flash Learning Activities For e-Learning Development (Part 1).”

Dave Boggs, CEO of SyberWorks, states:

“Dana Fine, Senior Instructional Designer here at SyberWorks, has developed a four-part article series on basic Flash learning activities used in online training content development. Dana is a frequent contributor to the Online Training Content Journal Blog http://www.boggse-learningchronicle.typepad.com/the_online_training conte/ and an established member our course development team.”

Boggs continues, “While there is an infinite number of learning activities that can be developed using Flash or any other e-Learning content development tool, this article series was developed for people who are new to online training development. The first article in the series looks at the development of a 'Circle Answer Conditional' Flash learning activity and provides a link with a sample Flash learning activity.”

The article is located in the SyberWorks Online Media Center at <http://www.syberworks.com/articles/4basicflash.htm>.
