

SyberWorks Media Center Presents a New Article – “Four Basic Flash Learning Activities For e-Learning Development (Part 3)”

Waltham, Massachusetts – December 11, 2006

SyberWorks, Inc., a leader in custom e-Learning Solutions and the Learning Management System (LMS) industry, today announces a new article available in the SyberWorks Online Media Center: “Four Basic Flash Learning Activities For e-Learning Development (Part 3).”

Dave Boggs, CEO of SyberWorks, states:

“This is the third article in a four-part series on basic Flash learning activities used in online training content development. It is written by Dana Fine, Senior Instructional Designer here at SyberWorks. Dana is a frequent contributor to the Online Training Content Journal Blog (http://www.boggse-learningchronicle.typepad.com/the_online_training_content/) and is an established member of our course development team.”

Boggs continues, “In the first article, Dana looked at developing 'Circle Answer Conditional' Flash learning activities. In the second article, she covers the development of 'Drag and Drop, One to Many Correspondence' Flash learning activities.” In the third article, Dana talks about developing a “Drag Fill In the Blank” learning activity, with some examples and a sample to illustrate how it can be used in custom online training development.

The article is located in the SyberWorks Online Media Center at <http://www.syberworks.com/articles/4basicflash3.htm>.
